The Quattro Firm Believes in Female Empowerment: Interview with Erica Dunhill of Erica Dunhill Photography

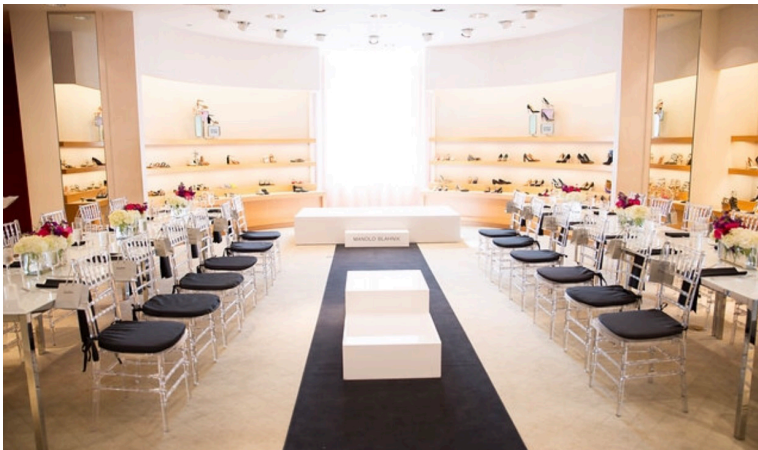

By Nicole McNamara Quattrocchi

As local photographer, Erica Dunhill reflects over a working lunch about how she got her start as a photographer and businesswoman, she laughed and called it a “daydream.” Erica loved photography and she wanted to work her own hours, so she dreamt of combining the two. If you look on Erica’s website or speak to her happy customers, her success at this “daydream” is certainly evident.

When we asked how it all happened, Erica admitted that she could not have made her daydream a reality without her supportive family. They were there to help her to make this daydream into the successful business that it has become. As someone who grew up in this area and therefore someone who knows where the best lighting can be captured and just how to achieve the right angle or the perfect beach to capture that dusk time newborn shot, Erica sets herself apart from the competition. Erica additionally credits her reasonable pricing and her pricing format for her success over competitors.

As a photographer at events, Erica enjoys that she can be both behind the scenes and that she is still a very important factor. Other vendors will rely on the photographer, making her an integral part of the event. After all, she is responsible for capturing the memories of the event and her work will be enjoyed by her clients for decades to come. During her editing process, Erica celebrates that feeling of pure love for an image and the joy that it will bring her clients. She loves that she is literally capturing time.

nothing is going to get better. It's not."

The Quattro Firm Believes in Female Empowerment: Interview with Erica Dunhill of Erica Dunhill Photography

Erica has faced some adversity but she believes that nothing is insurmountable. While Erica did admit that having some more “business experience” may have been helpful, she’s a quick learner and got a lot of hands on business experience.

Being a woman in business has been a joy for Erica. As a photographer for new families, Erica feels that there is a special closeness between other mothers, especially for new mothers. As a mother of two young boys, Erica can relate to these new mothers and can understand what a new mother may be feeling and wanting to capture at her newborn’s first photo shoot. Even with the “veteran” moms or mothers of toddlers, Erica feels that the special connection of knowing what the other mother is going through, which helps to create special and creative photographs. The result is a happy client.

Erica’s favorite events to photograph are the events with families who love each other. Capturing that love and closeness is a special treat for a photographer. Erica additionally loves any opportunity to capture love unfolding, especially when parents are holding their new child. Erica says that these are the moments that truly touch her heart.

As far as Erica’s feedback, she says that anytime she hears that a client is satisfied and happy is her favorite reaction. Anytime that a client is pleased is the best reaction that she can hope to receive. As a photographer, Erica hopes that each client is happy with her work and celebrates that her work is on websites, hanging in homes and offices, and placed in albums for years to come.

For advice for other women, Erica simply states that an understanding of business basics is of the utmost importance. Erica did not have much of a business background, but this did not give her pause nor did it cause her to give up on this dream. Nothing is insurmountable if you care enough to go for it.
